2. FACULTY SUPERVISION OF MEDICAL STUDENTS

The faculty have responsibility for the supervision of medical students. In their role as faculty they must provide a combination of Direct Supervision of Students (i.e. the faculty is personally present at key times during the educational process of the medical student); and Indirect Supervision of Students where the faculty member is aware of the educational components that the student is participating in. These roles are done in conjunction with and facilitated by the clerkship director. In addition faculty are expected to serve as a role model for the student to learn the art and science of Medicine. Faculty are expected to review and advise on patient care notes and plans and enable students to be an active partner in delivery of care, interacting with patients at each office visit or daily hospital visit. It is the responsibility of the faculty to assign patients and level of care to a medical student based on the faculty assessment of the expertise and level of training of the student.
