We, the graduating class of 2005, mark our transition by acknowledging those ideals we have gathered during our time at The Ohio State University.

As advocates, we will challenge ourselves to set aside personal and professional differences to preserve our patients' autonomy.

As culturally competent caregivers, we will strive to improve health and wellness for all of those who depend on us.

With enthusiasm, we will offer our best knowledge and talents, while paying tribute to the strength provided by loved ones.

With humility, we will acknowledge our own abilities and limitations.

We will respect our role within a holistic effort, participating in interdisciplinary care.

We will represent our profession with honor and respect, accepting our identities as both role models and lifelong learners.

As active members of a greater global community, we will promote a culture of health wherever we may go.

As our paths in medicine continue, we will strive to hold these thoughts close throughout our journey.
