As the class of 2006, we will fulfill the following obligations to our patients, to the medical profession, to our society, and to ourselves.

We will treat our patients with compassion, empathy, and dignity.

We will take the time to listen, and strive to act in the best interest of our patients, with respect for their emotional, physical and spiritual needs.

We will see each patient as an individual and uphold the trust they bestow upon us.

We will endeavor to achieve balance between the art and science of the medical profession, striving for clinical excellence.

We will educate those who are starting down the path we have traveled, as those who have traveled before us have so graciously done.

We will continue our pursuit of knowledge in order to provide the highest quality of care.

We will remember our duty to our society, aiming for justice and equality, and giving care to those in need without bias or prejudice.

And in ourselves we hope to nurture integrity and honesty, balancing confidence with humility, teaching with learning, and competence with the ability to recognize our limitations.

As we embark on our journey as physicians, may these goals lay the foundation for lifelong success and happiness.
