We, the class of 2011, uphold these ideals as future physicians:
We will act in our patients’ best interest, putting their needs above our own.
We will help patients make informed decisions about their healthcare.
We will respect patient individuality, especially when their backgrounds differ from our own.
We will listen to our patients
And always treat them with compassion.
We will serve others altruistically and without judgment.
We will develop trusting relationships with our patients, in order to be a source of comfort.
We will empower patients to make decisions in their healthcare
And educate patients, students, and each other.
We will promote the fair distribution of resources.
We will improve quality access to healthcare in our communities.
We will be active learners, keeping our curiosity.
We appreciate those who teach us selflessly, from our patients to our professors,
And we thank our loved ones, who support us constantly.
We will care for ourselves by being healthy in mind and body.
We will also be true to the friendships we have made herein
And to the values of The Ohio State University College of Medicine.
By this we will proceed with integrity.
